

Teach Children to Save Day

On April 19th, we will be visiting the second graders at Cashton Elementary to talk to them about saving money! Teach Children to Save Day is a program started in 1997 that has been encouraging young kids across the country to save and spend money wisely.

What can you do at home to help teach your kids about money?

- Talk openly about money with and around your kids. When you talk to your kids about money, it removes the mystery and helps them make smart choices.
- Give them fake money. Fake money is a great way to teach young kids about the value of money without actually entrusting them with any hard-earned cash. Think of it as training wheels for budding consumers.
- If you haven't done so already, open a savings account for your child that will earn interest. Watching their money grow will get them excited about saving and encourage them to keep their money in the account instead of spending it.
